Civil Engineering

Civil engineering is arguably the oldest engineering discipline. It deals with the built environment and can be dated to the first time someone placed a roof over his or her head or laid a tree trunk across a river to make it easier to get across.

The built environment encompasses much of what defines modern civilization. Buildings and bridges are often the first constructions that come to mind, as they are the most conspicuous creations of structural engineering, one of civil engineering's major sub-disciplines. Roads, railroads, subway systems, and airports are designed by transportation engineers,

In the Civil Construction Industry you can build just about anything. From a major freeway to railways, water storage reservoir or even new housing subdivisions. Civil Construction workers do the site clearance, excavations, sewerage and drainage, lay the asphalt for roads and ballast for railways and dam walls.

Civil construction is anything to do with the earth, water or transport infrastructure. It is a $10 billion a year Australian business that is crucial to Australia's economy. Your Resourcing Civil consultant's understand that this industry is for people who want to make a difference. It is an industry where you can really make an impact, leave your mark, work with other talented people and be well rewarded, we therefore rely heavily on the passive market, referrals and recommendations and in-depth market knowledge to ensure as Consultants we are mirroring those qualities. Jobs range from the plant operators who drive the earthmoving equipment on construction sites, to the engineers who design the structures and manage their implementation.
